Drop.org

drop.org has been activated, Natrak smoothly switched things, the mailing list is now up and running and all droppies have receeived there personal drop.org e-mail address. Oh behave, baby! I fixed a few problems which actually allowed me to fix my typoes in my previous post: now, you can actually check what particular bumper stickers I'm interested in!
*hint*hint*
Oh, I installed a new poll and whilst doing so I discovered a few poll problems I'll have to fix.
Anyway, I'll keep rambling as well as adding (semi-useless) posts to test our beast. My mom tends to talk to the walls ... at least I made some genetical progress, don't you think?

Voting poll

What have your friends done for you lately?

- Provided an alibi.
- Shared a drink, some laughs, and some code.
- Sent me an email saying ILOVEYOU.
- Asked me to fix their computer.
- Well, if I had some friends, I'm quite sure they would do wonderful things for me.

American democracy is taking a step forward.

Submitted by Dibbit on Sunday, December 03rd, 2000 - 16:47 — Politics & Freedom

In the light of America's failure to elect a President, The Queen of England has given notice to the revocation of their independence. The revocation containing this notice also included some rules that are to be introduced in America.

Making a weblog into a scientific journal

Submitted by hepster on Saturday, December 02nd, 2000 - 14:32 — Coding & Webdesign

How could we go about makeing a real scientific (or mathematical) discussion/journal on the web?

There are already many e-print servers- in math the main one is at los alamos. however these don't allow for any discussion, they just serve up PDF files. the question is how to merge this with something like drop.org to allow discussion.

@MORTENDK #DRUPALCON

JAN. 15 2001

Today, drop.org announces the release of drupal 1.00 after an extensive period of testing. Drupal is a full-featured content management/discussion engine using Apache/PHP/MySQL and suitable to setup a news-driven community or portal site similar to kuro5hin.org and slashdot.org.

Current features include discussion forums, web-based administration, theme support, an open submission queue, content management, a modularized design, PHP sessions, user management with access control and username/profanity/hostname filters, error logging, a public diary module, an affiliate site module, backend/headline generation (RSS/RDF) and much more

Ok! :)

After putting more than 8 hours of patch review time into this patch, coupled with the 8 days sun and most of #drupal spent on this, and EIGHT YEARS LATER, I felt confident committing the patch at #168. :) Hope that's okay, Dries. One wishlist item down! :)

Great work, everyone, and sun you get the award for most tenacity or most insanity or possibly both. THANK YOU.

See you in the follow-up issues! :)
